EVER.

News is scarce and so is bolted meal, but taters are coming in now which will be a fine substitute for bread.

We have recently been informed that Ollie Jenkins, a young man who was born and reared in this county, went out bathing on the 16th and was drowned. He has been living at Argillite, Greenup county, for a few years where he met his death.

We are having fine weather on our growing crops. Having refreshing showers and the good, hot sunshine let's praise God from whom all blessings flow. Crops are looking fine in this section of the country. The meadows are promising a double crop of hay this season. Pastures are good and stock is doing fine.

Will some reader of the Mountaineer tell through its columns how to cure grape rot; also how to prevent it?

Home of the Red Apple.

Wenatchee, Wash., July 1, '12. Dear Editor:—We have received several copies of your paper and read it with the greatest of pleasure.

We always find the names of many dear friends of our old Kentucky home where we were born and raised, but are now in the far west in the home of the big red apple where dollars grow on trees. Take down a map of the State of Washington, draw a pencil mark up the Columbia river until you reach a point of about ten miles south of an air line from Spokane to Seattle at the confluence of the Wenatchee and Columbia rivers and you have the geographical location of the city of Wenatchee, which ten years ago was a sagebrush desert, and is now a thriving city of 6,000 people surrounded by a thickly populated valley of 5,000 more.

Wenatchee is the lower end of the throbbing heart of the most famous section in the world. It has carried off nearly all the first prizes and fifty to eighty per cent of all prizes in every apple show and exposition at which she has been a contestant. Wenatchee apples are the highest colored, the most deliciously flavored, the most perfectly formed, the most uniform in size, the longest keepers and the highest selling apple produced. Good orchards should yield from ten to forty boxes to the tree. The net price seldom goes as low as $1 per box, and as high as $2 and $2.50. Count 80 trees to the acre and figure it out yourself. An acre of good apples will net from $800 to $3,000 per acre. Can Kentucky beat it?

While they have cherry trees that have produced as high as 200 boxes selling at 50 cents per box. Couple all this with the fact that Wenatchee is located in the midst of a community that thrills and vibrates with growth development and activity that she is endowed with, a most ideal climate that she has, as a natural inheritance, the great Columbia river flowing at her feet, that several hundred thousand acres of undeveloped land flank her on every side. She is bordered on the east with an immense wheat country, that she is set within a cluster of valuable water power sites several thousand horse power, of which have been developed; that she is buttressed on the west by a vast timber and lumbering region. Only 40 miles up the river by steamer is the most beautiful body of water in the west, cached away like a mirror in the heart of the mountains, a summer resort of note where tourists fling mountain trout to their hearts content in the great Chelan Lake, which is 60 miles long, 2 miles wide and 1,600 feet deep, and as clear as air.

Wenatchee is only four hours run from Spokane and only seven or eight hours run through the picturesque Cascade mountains to Seattle, the Queen City of the West, surrounded with her cluster of lakes, mountains, lovely parks and beaches. Wenatchee has the most up-to-date and progressive business men, the largest and liveliest Commercial Club and the most sensible and pretty lot of ladies.

Some say we have too much snow in the winter, but that is what makes the red apples big. Others say it is too hot in summer, but that is what makes the big apples red. Wenatchee is the healthiest, wealthiest, liveliest and most enterprising inland town in the greatest State of the grandest continent on the globe. The combined language does not supply us with words and phrases adequate to portray the advantages, opportunities and merits of Wenatchee, the home of the big red apple, where dollars grow on trees and all we can say is in the language of the good book, "Come and see."

I am always anxiously awaiting the arrival of the Mountaineer.

Very respectfully,
ADDIE ADAMS.

Back to the United States was the cry of the soldiers when the U. S. army transport Liscum steamed up to the docks at Parang Mindanao, P. I., March 30, 1912, and the 21st U. S. Infantry was marched aboard. It was a very joyful time for those who were coming back to the United States but a dreadful evening for those who were transferred and had to remain in the wilds of Mindanao to hike over the rough hills and round up hostile Moros. Some few were laughing but most of them seemed to be so down-hearted they could not say good bye to their comrades as they turned to march away. They were badly disappointed in not getting to return. When the transport sailed at 5:30 p. m., they stood on the dock and waved their hands until the steamer had sailed out of sight. Perhaps they will never meet with us again unless we should happen to re-enlist in the same regiment again. There are lots of them that will never do so again.

The ship stopped at Iloilo for a short time but we all went ashore to see the beautiful little town. The fellows would say there is nothing looks good over here. It is too far from home sweet home and mother. We only stayed five hours at Iloilo, then sailed again for Manila where we arrived April 5th and went into camp to await the sailing date of the U. S. A. T. Thomas across the Pacific, which was April 14. We were marched aboard the U. S. Army Transport Thomas at 10 o'clock, April 14th, and at 12 M., she sailed for the good old United States with over 900 passengers aboard. She steamed out of the Bay while the 21st Infantry band was playing. The sea was very calm all the way thru to Nagasaki, Japan, a distance of 1,114 miles to where she steamed up in the channel at 6 o'clock on the morning of April 20th, where they coaled the ship by hand. The little Japanese boys and girls swarmed around the transport like bees around a hive, passing coal up in little straw baskets that held about a gallon, and the Spair Deck was covered with beautiful souvenir's of Japanese trying to sell them to the soldiers. Your price was theirs on anything they had for sale. All the passengers went ashore in the town of Nagasaki, which is a very beautiful place indeed. The ship lay at anchor in Nagasaki for 24 hours, then sailed for Honolulu with a few more passengers picked up at Nagasaki. The sea was fine, no storms at all, and everybody seemed to be enjoying themselves fine. But the time was passing slowly. The band would give two concerts daily and this seemed to enliven them up some. At 8 o'clock every morning the band would play the Star Sprangled Banner and every soldier on deck would stand at attention and salute at the last note of the music.

There was nothing to be seen at all but the clear blue sky above and the deep blue sea beneath until May 5th we sailed into the harbor at Honolulu, a distance of 3,991 miles from Nagasaki, Japan. Our stay in Honolulu was limited to 5 hours in one of the most beautiful cities in the world. But after we left Honolulu for the United States the sea was very rough and the wind blew very cool and hard. The boys from the islands began to dig down in their lockers and pull out their overcoats and wore them all the way through to Portland, Ore. When land was sighted the boys began to climb the mast poles and get on the bridge, for they felt safe from their big sea voyage and back across the Pacific. The big ship steamed right up the Columbia river to Portland, Ore., on May 14th, a distance of 2,360 miles from Honolulu. The total distance from Parang Mindanao, P. I., to Portland, Ore., via Nagasaki, and Honolulu, is 8,660 miles, and a very rough road.

We are now stationed at Vancouver, Wash., a very beautiful place just across the river from Portland, Ore., surrounded by snow capped mountains the year around, just after being in P. I., where snow is never found.

Hon. Leslie Combs, one of the leading Roosevelt Progressives of the State, has sent out word to the Progressives to organize at once. He says the feeling all over Kentucky is intense for the great champion of the people's rights and the Republicans will go ten to one against Taft and the stolen nomination. Many good Progressive Democrats are ready to join the movement. It is suggested that a meeting be held here Saturday to lay plans for the campaign. All progressives in Mercer county are invited to meet here that day—Harrodsburg Leader.

EDITORIAL.

"Honesty is the best policy" in politics as well as business.

A Preventive of Crime.

Good schools always have prevented crime. We do not mean to say that education does away with crime but we do mean to say, and history does bear us out in saying, that good schools always diminish crime. Then if you would diminish crime do all you can FOR, not against, your schools. It matters not whether you get your choice teacher or not you owe it to your community of children to do all that you can for a good school. This will help to make your property more valuable as well as to decrease crime.

Where Do You Stand?

Another murder committed in Magoffin county. Just what many of the people of Little Paint section have been expecting for some months.

We have been informed that some attempts have been made to assassinate a man on the head of Rock House recently.

We are also informed that the people of Ivyton are talking very much of lynching one of their citizens.

What? Murder, assassination and lynching! Is there no remedy? Shall the law-abiding citizens of Magoffin permit all of this to be done?

What is the trouble?

One of our leading citizens said that Berry Burton would have received five or ten years had he been tried in Magoffin county.

Another of our leading citizens said that our grand juries, as a rule, did their duty well but that the fault was with the trial juries. If we are to decrease lawlessness our juries, as well as all other people, must awaken and be personally interested in seeing that our laws mean something and are enforced.

During the summer months mothers of young children should watch for any unnatural looseness of the bowels. When given prompt attention at this time serious trouble may be avoided. Chancrains Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy can always be depended upon. For sale by Dr. M. C. Kash.

Money is circulating more freely since the conventions. You will do us a favor to let some of it circulate this way.

GLUCK AND EMPEROR JOSEPH

Composer Harshly Told Austrian Monarch That Archduke Sang His Music Wretchedly.

Gluck, the composer, was not of the sort of men of whom courtiers are made. One day he attended, at the court at Vienna, a concert at which the Emperor Joseph II, and one of his archdukes sang a fragment from one of Gluck's compositions. Naturally enough, the imperial artiste glanced at the composer to see how he was impressed by the honor they were doing him. They were shocked to observe that he was making a series of extraordinary and significant grimaces. The emperor stopped and inquired whether he and the archduke were not singing the bit according to Gluck's idea of how it should be done.

"My idea!" exclaimed Gluck. "Why, sire, I am the poorest walker in the world, but I would vastly rather take a walk of six leagues than be forced to hear a composition of my own interpreted in such a way as that."

Joseph II was brave enough to take no notice of the criticism, but the court were quite convinced that if such a reproach had been addressed to the Czar Nicholas the composer would have prosecuted his musical studies from that time forth under the unfavorable surroundings of the Siberian mines.

It was the composer Weigl, a man of very different temperament from Gluck, who, when the Emperor Francis Joseph played the first violin in the performance of one of his overtures, threw himself at the monarch's feet, and exclaimed: "Ah, sire. Will your majesty benignantly condescend to grant my prayer, and favor me once more with a most gracious & sharp?"

Mack Bailey Shot and Instantly Killed by Bud Collins.

Governor Orders State Guards to Help Arrest Collins Who, With a Posse of Friends, is Hiding in Thickets and Swears Will Not Be Arrested.

Trouble Started Over Sweetheart.

Last Sunday at four o'clock Bud Collins, age 22, shot and instantly killed Mack Bailey, age 19, near the head of Little Paint, this county.

It seems that some several months ago the two young men had some bitter words over a baseball game. They had no further trouble until both of them began to call on the same girl. The young woman is reported to have gone with Bailey in preference to Collins, and on last Sunday after church refused to go with Collins again, when he said, "I'll kill Mack Bailey."

He mounted his mule and fired one shot while his revolver was under his coat and galloped down the creek. He induced Dennis Saylor to get in the saddle and go with him. When they had come upon Mack Bailey and his younger brother Taylor, age 15, and Charley Adams, age 18, Collins dismounted and pulled his revolver on Mack Bailey, saying, "If you speak I'll shoot you." Bailey stood still and Collins repeated the sentence, firing the fatal shot that took effect over the right eye. Young Bailey and Adams took hold of Collins. Adams and young Bailey then released Collins who then shot at Adams, who fell to the ground and feigned to be killed. Collins then started after a third man when young Bailey had taken his dead brother's revolver and emptied it at Collins who ran back up the road. Collins had received a stab in the back which caused him lose a great deal of blood. He had his wound dressed Sunday afternoon at the home of his Uncle, Nease Collins, and made his escape into the woods. He was accompanied by his Uncle, Nelson, who has a Winchester gun, and some other friends and relatives. It is reported that his Uncle Nelson said that they would die before they would be taken.

On Monday some of the deputy sheriffs searched for Collins but have been unable to find him. Henry Brown, County Jailor, and Floyd Patrick arrested Dennis Saylor, who is now in the county jail awaiting his examining trial. Eddie and Fred Bailey, brothers of Mack Bailey, have been in the saddle constantly since the murder. They are infuriated over the act and want no rest until they find Collins.

The shooting took place near the home of "Black" Green Adams. There is a reward of $150 for the arrest of Collins.

A Standard Endowment Policy issued by the Equitable Life Assurance Society is better than a GOVERNMENT BOND.

Why?

Because it is practically as safe, and is in other respects superior.

1. It costs less.
2. It is paid for in moderate installments.
3. The investment is INSURED. That is to say, if the investor dies the unpaid installments are CANCELED, and the Society pays the insurance money in full at once.

DIET AND HEALTH HINTS

By DR. T. J. ALLEN

LIVED SEVEN YEARS ON MILK ONLY.

British medical men have been much interested in the case of Arthur Keene of Penarth, Glamorgan. The boy has lived on milk exclusively, nearly seven years, and was a remarkable example of physical development and normal health. His diet has been a little more than two quarts of milk daily. It is not to be assumed that a child after the first year would live very much better on milk than on any other food, but remarkable results would probably follow in every case the substitution of a simple diet for the ordinary mixture of fresh bread, mushes, flesh meat, tea and coffee and fruit indiscriminately mixed. It is important that experiments be instituted that would demonstrate systematically the benefits from scientific feeding.

SCHOOL SUFFRAGE

CAMPAIGN INAUGURATED BY KENTUCKY FEDERATION OF WOMEN'S CLUBS.

Law Granting School Suffrage to Kentucky Women is Now in Effect—Women Who Can Read and Write Now Eligible to Vote.

Lexington, Ky.—The Education Department of the Kentucky Federation of Women's Clubs has started, this week, a School Suffrage campaign which will continue throughout the months of July, August and September. By means of the press, the printed circular letter, the pulpit, Club and School League meetings—in fact, by every means possible, an effort will be made to influence the women of Kentucky to show their interest in public schools by expressing their legal opinion on the subject.

The greatest effort will be made to have the subject presented at the various Teachers' Institutes, and letter has been sent by the Education Department, of which Mrs. R. N. Roark, of Richmond, is Chairman, asking for a place on the Institute program for a School Suffrage speaker. Some of the most brilliant and capable women of the state have volunteered to address the Institutes without any expense to the local teachers: Mrs. Cora Wilson Stewart, of Morehead; Mrs. Mason Maury, Mrs. Harry White sides, Mrs. John Little, of Louisville; Mrs. R. N. Roark, and Miss Bell Bennett, of Richmond; Mrs. T. J. Smith, of Frankfort; Mrs. A. M. Harrison, and Mrs. Debra Breckinridge, of Lexington.

Get Out the Vote.

It is the policy of the Education Department simply to work to get out a large vote for the most efficient school officials, and to furnish, through the public press, such brief and necessary information about election laws as will enable all women to use the school suffrage with intelligence and with dignity. No effort whatever will be made to build up a woman's machine, nor to back any special candidate; on the contrary, a continued and persistent effort will be made to keep all school elections and school questions "out of politics."

Letters of Commendation.

Many letters have been received this week by the Department of Education of the K. F. W. C., from county superintendents and teachers. A superintendent from one of the Blue Grass counties writes as follows:

"The county school superintendents and progressive teachers will appreciate more than any other class of persons in Kentucky the granting of school suffrage to women, for they realize how much this step will mean in the state's crusade for better educational conditions. I believe, moreover, that the teachers feel an especial responsibility to help arouse all the women, who are their school patrons, to this new privilege, and that they will co-operate in every way possible with the club women to get out a large school suffrage vote."

An earnest and continued interest on the part of the club women will soon bring about a realization of some of those educational ideals which we have long possessed: more convenient buildings and more beautiful grounds, better trained teachers and higher salaries, longer school terms and a larger per cent of attendance, courses in Domestic Science, Manual Training, and the Science of Agriculture, a curriculum that shall consider the needs of the individual child, and shall contribute something practical to his development."

Suffrage Law Now in Effect.

The law granting suffrage to Kentucky women went into effect on the 12th of June. Women who are able to read and write are now eligible to vote in the August and November elections for school officials and upon school questions, and are eligible to hold any office pertaining to the management of the schools, except those otherwise prescribed by the constitution.

John T. Shelby, of Lexington, who participated in the framing of the School Suffrage Bill, states that it was the intention of those who prepared the bill that it should give women the right to vote for county superintendents. His legal opinion follows:

"Section 154 of the Constitution gives to the General Assembly the power to regulate elections of school trustees and other common school district elections." The Act of March 24, 1908, for the government and regulation of common schools makes the county the school district and provides for the sub-division of this district into educational divisions and the educational divisions into sub-districts. The office of county superintendent is not a constitutional office, and under the present system the county being the district the superintendent is a school district officer and the election at which he or she may be chosen is a 'Common School District Election.' It would seem, therefore, that the General Assembly had the constitutional power to confer upon women the right of suffrage, which was attempted to be conferred by the Act of 1915. Whether this be so or not the intention of the framers of the bill was certainly to confer upon women, if it could be constitutionally done, the right to vote for the county superintendent and upon school measures or questions submitted to a vote of the people.

SYNOPSIS

The great steamer Titan, supposed to be unsinkable, starts across the Atlantic. Rowland, once a lieutenant, now a common sailor, meets his old love Myra. She is with her husband and child.

Rowland is drugged by the captain's order and is then given the starboard bridge lookout, so that he will disgrace himself. Myra's child steals away and joins Rowland.

The Titan cuts a ship in two, and her captain endeavors to conceal the crime. Rowland objects. The captain gives him whisky, so that he will be discredited. Myra accuses him of attempting to murder her child.

Rowland, who has been an atheist, prays for help, and he and the child are rescued. Meyer, a marine insurance man, is heavily hit by the loss of the Titan and the Royal Age.

Meyer will be ruined if the Titan insurance is paid, and Selfridge, little Myra's grandfather, will be ruined if it is not paid. Meyer finds Rowland and relies upon his story to break the insurance policies. Rowland's story helps him.

CHAPTER VII.

A Tale of Hasheesh.

LITTLE Myra, unburnt, but badly frightened, began to cry and call for Rowland in her own way, to the wonder and somewhat to the scandal of the gentle old man who was endeavoring to soothe her.

"Dammy!" she cried, as she struggled to go to him. "I want Dammy—Dammy—Da-a-may!"

"Oh, what a pad little girl," said the jocular Mr. Meyer, looking down on her. "Where did you learn such language?"

"It is my nickname," said Rowland, smiling in spite of himself. "She has coined the word," he explained to the agitated Mr. Selfridge, who had not yet comprehended what had happened, "and I have not yet been able to persuade her to drop it—and I could not be harsh with her. Let me take her, sir." He seated himself with the child, who nestled up to him contentedly and soon was tranquil.

"Now, my friend," said Mr. Meyer, "you must tell us about this drugging." Then, while Captain Bryce, under the memory of the blow he had received, nursed himself into an insane fury and Mr. Austen, with his hand resting lightly on the captain's shoulder ready to restrain him, listened to the story, and the attorney drew up a chair and took notes of the story, and Mr. Selfridge drew his chair close to Myra and paid no attention to the story at all, Rowland recited the events prior to and succeeding the shipwreck. Beginning with the finding of the whisky in his pocket, he told of his being called to the starboard bridge lookout in place of the rightful incumbent, of the sudden and strange interest Mr. Austen displayed as to his knowledge of navigation, of the pain in his stomach, the frightful shapes he had seen on the deck beneath and the sensations of his dream, leaving out only the part which bore on the woman he loved; he told of the sleep walking child which awakened him, of the crash of ice and instant wreck and the fixed condition of his eyes, which prevented their focusing only at a certain distance, finishing his story—to explain his empty sleeve—with a graphic account of the fight with the bear.

"And I have studied it all out," he said in conclusion. "I was drugged, I believe, with hasheesh, which makes a man see strange things, and brought up on the bridge lookout, where I could be watched and my ravings listened to and recorded for the sole purpose of discrediting my threatened testimony in regard to the collision of the night before. But I was only half drugged, as I spilled part of my tea at supper. In that tea, I am positive, was the hasheesh."

"You know all about it, don't you?" snarled Captain Bryce from his chair. "Twas not hasheesh; 'twas an infusion of Indian hemp. You don't know—Mr. Austen's hand closed over his mouth, and he subsided.

"Self convicted," said Rowland with a quiet laugh. "Hasheesh is made from Indian hemp."

"You hear this, gentlemen!" exclaimed Mr. Meyer, springing to his feet and facing everybody in turn. He pounced on Captain Barry. "You hear this confession, captain—you hear him say Indian hemp? I have a witness now, Mr. Thompson. Go right on with your suit. You hear him, Captain Barry. You are disinterested. You are a witness. You hear?"

"Yes, I heard it—the murdering scoundrel!" said the captain.

Mr. Meyer danced up and down in his joy, while the attorney, pocketing his notes, remarked to the discomfited Captain Bryce, "You are the poorest fool I know," and left the office.

Then Mr. Meyer calmed himself and, facing the two steamship officers, said slowly and impressively, while he pointed his forefinger almost into their faces:

"England is a fine country, my friends—a fine country to leave behind sometimes. Dere is Canada and der United States and Australia and South Africa—all fine countries, too—fine countries to go to with new names. My friends, you will be bulletined and listed at Lloyd's in less than half an hour, and you will never again sail under der English flag as officers. And, my friends, let me say that in half an hour after you are bulletined all Scotland Yard will be looking for you, but my door is not locked."

Silently they arose, pale, shame-faced and crushed, and went out the door, through the outer office and into the street.

Mr. Selfridge had begun to take an interest in the proceedings. As the two men passed out he arose and asked:

"Have you reached a settlement, Mr. Meyer? Will the insurance be paid?"

"No!" roared the underwriter in the ear of the puzzled old gentleman, while he slapped him vigorously on the back. "It will not be paid. You or I must have been ruined, Mr. Selfridge, and it has settled on you. I do not pay der Titan's insurance, nor will der other insurers. On der contrary, as der collision clause in der policy is void with der rest, your company must reimburse me for der bad insurance which I must pay to der Royal Age owners—that is, unless our good friend here, Mr. Rowland, who was on der lookout at der time, will swear that her lights were out."

"Not at all," said Rowland. "Her lights were burning. Look to the side of the door! Gentlemen!" he exclaimed. "Look out for him! Catch him!"

Mr. Selfridge was stumbling toward a chair. He grasped it, loosened his hold and before any one could reach him fell to the floor, where he lay with ashen lips and rolling eyes, gasping convulsively.

"Heart failure," said Rowland as he knelt by his side. "Send for a doctor."

"Send for a doctor," repeated Mr. Meyer through the door to his clerks, "and send for a carriage. Quick! I don't want him to die in der office."

Captain Barry lifted the helpless figure to a couch, and they watched, while the convulsions grew easier, the breath shorter and the lips from ashen gray to blue. Before a doctor or carriage had come he had passed away.

"Sudden emotion of some kind," said the doctor when he did arrive. "Violent emotion too. Hear bad news?"

"Bad and good," answered the underwriter—"good in learning that this dear little girl was his granddaughter."

"Dammy!" she cried, as she struggled to go to him. "I want Dammy—Dammy—Da-a-may!"

"Oh, what a pad little girl," said the jocular Mr. Meyer, looking down on her. "Where did you learn such language?"

"It is my nickname," said Rowland, smiling in spite of himself. "She has coined the word," he explained to the agitated Mr. Selfridge, who had not yet comprehended what had happened, "and I have not yet been able to persuade her to drop it—and I could not be harsh with her. Let me take her, sir."

"You will not testify? What you mean?"

"What I said, and I do not feel called upon to give you my reasons. Mr. Meyer."

"My good friend," said the underwriter, advancing with outstretched hands to Rowland, who backed away and, taking Myra by the hand, moved toward the door. Mr. Meyer sprang ahead, locked it and removed the key and faced them.

"Oh, mine goat Gott," he shouted, lapsing in his excitement into more pronounced dialect, "what I do to you, hey? Why you go pack on me, hey? Haf I not bay der doctor's bill? Haf I not bay for der carriage? Haf I not treat you like one shentleman? Haf I not, hey? I sit you down in mine office and call you Mr. Rowland. Haf I not been one shentleman?"

"Open that door," said Rowland quietly.

"Yes, open it," repeated Captain Barry, his puzzled face clearing at the prospect of action on his part. "Open it or I'll kick it down."

"But you, mine friend, heard der admission of der captain of der drugging. One goat witness will do. Two is better. But you will swear, mine friend. You will not ruin me."

"I stand by Rowland," said the captain grimly. "I don't remember what was said anyhow. Got a blamed bad memory. Get away from that door."

Captain Barry, Rowland and Myra followed by a panting heart borne malice from the agitated underwriter, left the office and reached the street. The carriage that had brought them was still waiting.

"Settle inside," called the captain to the driver. "We'll take another. Rowland."

Around the first corner they found a cab, which they entered. Captain Barry giving the driver the direction—"Dark Peerless, East India dock."

"I think I understand the game, Rowland," he said as they started. "You don't want to break this child."

"That's it," answered Rowland weakly as he leaned back on the cushion, faint from the excitement of the last few moments, "and as for the right or wrong of the position I am in—why, we must go farther back for it than the question of lookouts. The cause of the wreck was full speed in a fog. All hands on lookout could not have seen that berg. The underwriters knew the speed and took the risk. Let them pay."
